A disconnecting new report has revealed that if business contin- ues as usual on the front of carbon dioxide emissions, India is likely to experience 23 continuous years of economic decline. The report further predicts that this change in times to come. Global risk intelligence firm Verisk Maplecroft has ranked India among the top three ‘ reducer” countries, citing its failure to address climate change. This change, in turn, is expected to lead to a loss of 60% of the global GDP. This significant change in climate is a result of increased greenhouse gas emissions, which have been attributed to the burning of fossil fuels, deforestation, and industrial activities. To add to these, the impact of climate change is now being felt with increased frequency and intensity, leading to more frequent and severe weather events, such as heatwaves, floods, and droughts. These events not only disrupt daily life but also have a significant economic impact, leading to loss of productivity and damage to infrastructure.

What governments should do

The report suggests that governments need to take urgent action to mitigate the impact of climate change. This can be done by implementing policies that reduce greenhouse gas emissions, such as by transition to renewable energy sources, improving energy efficiency, and promoting sustainable practices. Additionally, governments should invest in climate adaptation measures, such as building resilient infrastructure and developing early warning systems to mitigate the impact of extreme weather events.

Don't fret about green subsidies

While implementing these policies, it is important to note that there is no need to fret about green subsidies. According to some reports, China has set aside $600 billion for renewable energy projects, which is a significant amount of funding. However, it is important to note that this funding is aimed at promoting renewable energy and reducing greenhouse gas emissions, and not to create undue pressure on the environment.

The world is unofficially going all gold

The diversification of the gold market can be attributed to several factors. One of the primary reasons is the increasing demand for gold as a hedge against uncertainty. This is particularly true in times of geopolitical uncertainty, such as during times of economic sanctions or political instability. Additionally, gold is considered a safe haven asset, which means that it is often seen as a good investment during times of economic uncertainty.

A Swiss expedition led by Max Eiselin reached the summit of Mount Everest for the first time in 1953. The expedition, which included a team of Swiss climbers and a Canadian guide, successfully reached the summit on May 29, 1953. The expedition was led by Swiss mountain guide Max Eiselin, who had been selected by the Swiss Alpine Club to lead the team.

Don't fret about green subsidies

While the diversification of the gold market can be attributed to factors such as geopolitical uncertainty and economic instability, it is important to note that these factors should not be the only reason for diversifying the gold market. Diversifying the gold market can also be seen as a strategic move to reduce the country's dependence on dollar reserves. This is because the US dollar is the dominant currency in the world, and its value can be volatile. By diversifying the gold market, India can reduce its dependence on the US dollar and increase its financial independence.

In another public meeting in Bhubaneswar, he opined to people not to get upset by lies and crocodile tears ofBJP leaders.

Pattanaik's close aide VK Patnaik, who accompanied him to the election rallies, asserted that BJP leaders who were throwing crocodile tears were unable to fulfill their promises.

Pattanaik, a BJD leader, said that the CM, in the first column of his speech, would express his "feelings of power", would approve the de- cision to give 5000 free electricity to the poor every month, while he would only fulfill the BJP leaders' vows were "show- ers of benefits to people in the short time".

In the meantime, the BJD leaders also praised the state government for its "smart" approach in providing benefits to the people, and said that the BJD is the only party that is focused on the welfare of the masses.

They also highlighted their party's achievements in the state, pointing out that the BJD had been able to implement several welfare schemes and has been successful in improving the lives of the people.

BJP leaders, on the other hand, were mocked for their "crocodile tears" and "false promises," and were accused of not fulfilling their election promises. The BJD leaders also accused the BJP of misinformation and spreading lies, and said that the BJD was the only party that was not doing so.

In conclusion, the BJD leaders said that the people of Odisha had given them a mandate to continue the welfare work they had been doing, and that they would continue to fight for the welfare of the people.

Apart from the BJD, other political parties like the Congress and the Janata Dal (U) were also present at the rallies, and had their own agendas.

However, the main focus of the day was on the BJD's commitment to the welfare of the people, and their efforts to bring about positive change in the state.
Indian mothers concerned about kids’ screen time

The report, released by the Indian Market Research Foundation (IMRF) and the Children's Rights Forum, is based on a survey of 600 working mothers across four metropolitan cities, focusing on how children are affected during 10 years of age.

The report found that 89% of Indian mothers are concerned about their child's screen time. This concern is driven by issues such as academic performance, behavioral issues, and physical health concerns.

The report suggests that limiting screen time can help in reducing these concerns and recommends strategies such as setting screen time limits, providing alternative activities, and creating a supportive environment.

The findings highlight the need for a comprehensive approach to address the issues related to screen time and to provide support to parents in managing their children's digital usage.
